Death in the Freezer

Afterthought

After reading the story, I have a strong feeling of sympathy for Ellen. Since her parents give more love to her brother Al than that to her during the childhood, she is jealous of her brother. She always pretends to be nice in front of her brother. Due to her abnormal growing background, she has abnormal personality. She makes some commitment, such as being addicted to drugs.

I have learned a lot from this story. I realize how important the growing background affects one’s life. For instance, if a kid doesn’t get enough love from his parents, they won’t be able to share love with others. If a kid suffers from unfair treatment, such as sexual discrimination, they will not be able to have a normal personality. Sometimes, these may cause social problems.

To sum up, we should love our children and treat them the way we wish to be treated. Remember that the more love we give to our children, the more love they can share with others. The more love they share with others, the better society we create.
